This was a short-term, longitudinal investigation, involving a self-selected non-clinical sample (N=39 family subsystems—over 80 individuals) in which I used a case study approach, and 3 guiding theoretical perspectives (a family stress perspective, a family systems perspective—including Wright & Leahey's nsg model, and a symbolic interactionist-phenomenological perspective). I was fortunate to have the late Dr. Tom Kitwood at one of my mentors. He's known for person-centered care. Although he lived in the UK, we got together at several international conferences to fine-tune the thesis. His sister was a nurse up in Edmonton. Was a ton of work but the Dept. of Sociology, University of Toronto was very demanding.
